Double means extra petals are present. There may be doubled petals and as a result, Double Daffodils may resemble carnations or even gardenias rather than daffodils.

Stamens: cut six small yellow seed head stamens in half and glue to 33gauge white wire using craft glue or tape together using ¼ width tape.

Petals from Trumpet cutter: Take a piece of Paste and roll paper thin, allow surface to dry, flip over, cut out six petals from the trumpet cutter and nine flower petals; place under plastic.

Take a small ball of paste and insert a dry white 33gauge wire a distance equal to the length of the cutter. Squeeze firmly and roll back and forth (twiddle) up to the tip of the wire; place under plastic.

Take a trumpet petal and lay on face of the Alstromeria veiner. Take the twiddled wire and lay it on the center of the petal to the very end, cover with the back veiner and press firmly. This will fix the wire to the petals while veining it.

Color both sides with daffodil color and color the bases with lime. Frill petals heavily with frilling tool. Dip the petal in glaze and blot on tissue. Pinch peals with your fingers to ruffle; set aside to dry. Continue this procedure with the rest of the trumpet petals.

Take the nine flower petals and twiddle wire as above; leave the petals white but color the bases with lime. Frill the petals as above.

Assembly: Bend each flower petal down at wire where pointed part starts. Take stamens and tape four of the frilled pinched trumpet petals around the stamens with ¼ width tape. Add in three white flower petals. Tape in the two trumpet petals and then tape in the six white flower petals; continue tape down the stem. Flowers can vary in colors and placement of petals.

Seed box and Sepal: Take a pea size ball of paste and insert daffodil stem. Roll paste at base of flower to form seed box and color with rainforest color. Roll paste until transparent; cut a petal from petal cutter and leave uncovered to dry slightly. Attach the sepal to the stem with slight water and crumple slightly to give a realistic effect. 🌷
